

Blake Winslow is a proud resident of Fruit Heights and a lifelong member of the Davis County community. He lives with his wife, Catherine, and their two children. Since moving to Fruit Heights Blake has fallen in love with the city's small-town charm, mountain views, and tight-knit neighborhoods. He's been actively involved in the community, serving on the Burton Elementary Community Council, Parent-Teacher Organization, in church callings, and with the Central 3 CTC.

Blake earned his degree in English with a minor in Political Science from Weber State University. Before becoming a stay-at-home parent, he worked for Davis Behavioral Health—an experience that deepened his understanding of people and strengthened his commitment to service. As a parent with strong ties to local families, he brings a unique and responsive voice to city issues. He's passionate about building real relationships, getting to know his neighbors, and—whenever possible—making them laugh.

Blake has seen firsthand the changes that come with population growth and believes in managing growth wisely while preserving the character that makes Fruit Heights special. He is committed to open communication, thoughtful leadership, and keeping the community strong and connected.
